

Letter to the World

Rune E. Messingsang

25 August 2021

1

To anyone who would read this for whatever reason, global changes are coming whether we are prepared or not. For several reasons, including but not limited to global economy, global emigration, and global climate, we as a species upon Planet Earth are nearing a collective emergency.

This is not a joke and it is not a drill. Changes will be coming to our global society. What qualifies me to make such a statement? Merit. I am a member of several international non-governmental organizations, and I understand how to think on a global scale. We need to make changes to

1. Our cultural environments

In order to accommodate for global communication, automation, general technological advances, we will need to make changes to our financial paradigm in the west. This will involve some form of a UBI-like deal. With a UBI deal (take it from me, I'm an early bird to Elysium) comes a huge responsibility and also a huge problem of Meaning. We need to think individually about what is meaningful over what is valuable, and the thinking starts now.

2. Our cultural tolerance and reception towards others

In order to accommodate for the entire concept of globalization, an ongoing inevitable project, as well as developments in global communications, we must accept our differences. I suggest tolerance; the lowering of our judgement towards others as individual human beings. Thank you for listening, and in whichever language you may interpret, Allahu Akbar (it means: God is Great)

I appreciate your attention.